Forging the New Political Unity: The Architecture of Emancipation

The Workers Party addresses the fundamental rupture in human relationship we see going on today —characterized as a shift from consensus to coercion and the shattering of social cohesiveness—by advancing an independent political program designed to replace the anti-social agenda of monopoly capital with a new political power based on the independent organization of the working class.

The Party's program argues that the old claims of "consensus" (often described as the "social compact" or "liberal-labor alliance") are today being shattered by the capitalist class itself in its drive to save its dying system through fascism, war, and economic plunder.

To resolve this rupture, the Workers Party proposes a 3 part program of Democratic Renewal, Economic Rights, and a Democratic Foreign Policy, which aims to forge a new political unity among the people.

Here is how the program addresses the decisive aspects of this rupture:

1. Addressing Political Coercion: Program for Democratic Renewal

The rupture is politically manifested by the exclusion of the people from decision-making and the imposition of the arbitrary power of the executive branch and the two-party monopoly. The state is viewed not as a tool for social cohesion, but as an instrument of force and coercion for the ruling class.

The program for Democratic Renewal seeks to heal this fracture by empowering the people to become the actual decision-makers. It demands the creation of mechanisms that guarantee the masses a direct role in governance, such as the right to recall elected officials and the use of referendums to decide fundamental law.

Breaking the Two-Party Monopoly: The program calls for breaking the political monopoly of the Democratic and Republican parties - the parties of the rich that enforce this coercion. By stripping these parties of their privileged status to nominate candidates, the program aims to return that power to the people, replacing the rule of force with a system where the government is strictly accountable to the electorate.

2. Addressing Social Fragmentation: Campaign for Economic Rights

Today's shattering of cohesiveness is economically driven by the anti-social agenda of the capitalists, which denies any social responsibility for the well-being of the people and reduces human relations to "survival of the fittest" in the free market.

The Campaign for Economic Rights (CER) addresses this by asserting that economic security (jobs, healthcare, education) is not a privilege or a matter of charity, but an inalienable human right that society must guarantee. This program aims to re-establish social cohesion by harmonizing individual needs with the general interests of society.

The Pro-Social Agenda: To counter the atomization we are seeing, where individuals are pit against one another, the program promotes a pro-social agenda. This agenda

40 Years of Objective Truth: A Material Foundation for Victory

The publication of the 40th volume of The Worker stands as concrete material proof of the persistence and solidity of the independent working class movement.

While the capitalist media spins illusions to maintain their monopoly, this newspaper continues to document the objective reality of the class struggle, rejecting ambiguity for the plain truth.

Each issue provides the verifiable facts and agreement necessary to organize our forces against the enemy. We mark this anniversary by strengthening the physical infrastructure of our press, ensuring that the truth remains firmly in the hands of the workers.

demands that the first priority of the economy be the well-being of the people, rather than the profits of the monopolies. By fighting for these collective rights, the working class acts as the defender of the rights of all, thereby rebuilding unity among the fragmented sections of the population.

3. Addressing International Coercion: Democratic Foreign Policy

Globally, the shift from consensus to coercion is identified as U.S. imperialism's reliance on the doctrine of Might Makes Right, endless war, and the violation of national sovereignty.

Sovereignty vs. Dictate: The party's Democratic Foreign Policy addresses this by demanding an end to all U.S. interference and aggression. It calls for a world order based on sovereign equality and mutual respect, replacing the coercive law of the jungle with relations of peace and friendship.

Proletarian Internationalism: To counter the chauvinism used to justify war (which ruptures the bond between the U.S. working class and the world's peoples), the program emphasizes proletarian internationalism. This principle asserts that the U.S. working class has no interest in empire and must stand in solidarity with oppressed nations, effectively rebuilding the human relationships destroyed by imperialist aggression.

4. Rebuilding Cohesiveness: The New Political Unity

We argue that the rupture cannot be repaired by trying to patch up the old, failed liberal-labor alliances. Instead, a new political unity must be forged through independent struggle.

Independent Organization: This new cohesiveness is built by organizing the working class as an independent political force. By building the Workers Party and the mass workers' press, the class creates a potent catalyst that unites the scattered struggles of the people into "one mighty torrent".

5. Socialism as the Ultimate Solution

In sum, the program addresses the root cause of the rupture—the contradiction between social production and private appropriation—by advocating for Socialism. Socialism has long been presented as the only system capable of fully restoring social cohesiveness in the modern era of history and we are in full agreement with this. It abolishes the antagonistic classes and organizes production to meet the needs of all, realizing the social character of human existence.

The Message of the State

In a time when electioneering is in a lull and the politicians have secured their seats, the state has switched its transmission from the seduction of promises to the brute broadcast and implementation of terror against the most vulnerable.

The so-called "war on drugs" and the relentless criminalization of the homeless serve not as policy debates, but as a deafening one-way communication of force, intended to silence the poor and erase their claims on society through the logic of the baton and the prison cell.

To counter this blockade of silence where the only message from above is a threat to our survival, we must open a new channel of independent political expression, creating a space where the unified voice of the people acts as the solvent to these structures of repression and asserts that the well-being of the masses must be the guiding principle of the independent political dialogue led by the working class program of solutions.
